Street-Railway Development-Not many years ago the only street rail-way Richmond had was from Brook avenue to Libby Hill. An omnibus line found profit in carrying passengers from Eighteenth street up Main to the West End, and this virtually forced the building of the Main-street railway. The wants of Manchester were next supplied by the construction of the Eichmond and Manchester Line. There was a long halt, after which came the Electric Line, which gave a prodigious impulse to the growth of the the city and suburbs. The road to the Beven-Pines battle-field followed close up on the Electric. Next the Marshall-Street

Line came into existence. All these companies reached out to the auburbs until two lines went to the New reservoir, one to the Exposition-Grounds, one to Fulton, and one way down into Henrico, Yet the work goes on.

Another company is building several miles of track in Manchester to come down to Mayo's bridge to connect with the Marshall-Street line.

In all we have thirty-two and a half miles of street-car routes, laid for most of the distance with double track-a gain of about twenty-five miles of route within a

This is not all. In good time roads will be built to Chestnut Hill, to Barton' Heights, and out the Brook road and wherever else a suburban settlement is Next we ought to have a road crossing the river near the Three-Mile locks, and then Richmond and Manchester would be belted by a series of great lines, and advantages would be given our population which no other community possesses. Consider the money spent on these roads and the property they have developed. Here, at once, you have an explanation of the rise in lands, and if you will observe you will see that though thousands of new houses have been erected recently all are occupied and there is demand for more. Our people here, in whose memories the 29th of May exists as a treasure of postbellum days, were the more ready to celebellum days, were the more ready to celebrate the Fourth, because at the unveiling of the Lee monument, when they displayed Confederate flags by the thousand, the northern press, save here and there were wise enough to see it was no evidence of disloyalty, but was admitted to be a very natural and proper thing to do. But for the prominence given the force bill just at this time, despite the fact that the Administration is thoroughly hostile to us, this Fourth would the force bill just at this time, despite the fact that the Administration is thoroughly hostile to us, this Fourth would have been observed more generally and with greater enthusiasm in the South than any since 1860. Year by year our urban population is searing more and more of the burdens of taxation, and to this extent, at least, are relieving country people. Richmond alone carries a great big share, and if we continue to grow in the next ten years as we have n the past three or four, we will be able to do still more. So, it will be seen, every citizen of this State has a direct interest in helping to build up Richmond.

How could we have better proof of the growth of Richmond than the fact that in 1880 the public school enrolment here was 011, while in 1800 it was 11,740?

We begin to think we have been far too modest in fixing our population at 87,000.

STUART NORMAL COLLEGE.

Interesting Closing Exercises Including Vocal and Instrumental Music-Addresses. [Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.]

Synant, Va., July 4, 1890.
On Thursday night the Stuart Normal College began its series of entertainments. The exercises were held in the Baptist church, which was filled to overflowing. This was the night for the celebration of the Young Ladies' Literary Society. At 8:30 o'clock the programme was commenced with music.

with music.

After prayer there was a colloquy, "Days of Washington," between Misses Lillian Via and Anice Clark. Both young ladies acquitted themselves handsomely. Then followed a recitation, "The Maniac," by Mrs. Mildred Ashworth. Next was music, an instrumental duct, "Home, Sweet Home," by two little gris, Misses Maggie Rangeley and Nellie Turner. Then came a reading, "New England's Weather," by Miss Lucy Floyd, who in an exquisite manner rendered this difficult selection from Mark Twaia's writings.

Let the People Protest.

The suggestion of the New York Demorats who assembled in Tammany Hall to celebrate the Fourth that mass-meetings be called throughout the country to protest against the Federal election bill is worthy of adoption.

In a card published in another column one of the most distinguished citizens of Richmond seconds the proposition.

Yes, let the voice of the people be heard. Let the Senate be warned of the danger of the country.

Here in the South it would be particularly appropriate for those northern men who have settled amongst us, or have invested their means in our industries, to speak out boldly and tell the Republican senators that the measure proposed by the House is sure to produce the most violent disturbances of the public peace this section has seen since the war.

Democrats in the North and West should also enlist the sympathy of liberal-minded Democrats in the North and West should also enlist the sympathy of liberal-minded Republicans, and in mass-meetings assembled set forth the reckless disregard of precedents, law, and justice embodied in the Rowert-Lopor bill.

and Mr. C. E. Hughes then entertained the audience with an instrumental duct, "Secret Love," Mr. C. H. Ross delivered an excellent oration upon "Work, Wait, and Win." Mr. R. L. Hooker then read the "Coilege Bugle-Horn," the society's paper, which was greatly enjoyed by the audience, The last of the pregramme a typical solo.
